Face and (Im)politeness | Request PDF - ResearchGate Summary/Abstract: Research on face is undergoing a move away from face being viewed as an individual construct to a more interactional one under the influence of discursive approaches to politeness. In this framework, it has been argued that like politeness, face is an interactional phenomenon and should be explored as such (see, e.g., Arundale, 2010; Haugh, 2010; O'Driscoll, 2011a). However, face and politeness are different kinds of concepts, the understanding of which probably ...
