Though waiting is hard, grandparents say that when everyone finally feels safe to visit, the first in-person meeting with a grandchild will be special. Grandparents Elena and Daniel Amsili (62 and 65, respectively), of Aventura, Florida, waited breathlessly for the first glimpse of their new grandchild over a video connection. Grandparents Struggle to See Grandchildren Amid COVID For grandparents especially, I can't think of an occasion more painful to miss out on than holding and bonding with their newborn grandchild. Another major challenge has been not having grandparents or relatives to call on to watch the older child when you're going into labour, or to help with the toddler after the baby is born. Is it safe for grandparents to meet your new baby now? A grandparent who wants more control over the grandchild can go to court and ask for legal custody as well as physical custody, both being established through a court order. Even if there is a court order, parents can regain custody, but they'd have to petition the court. In most cases, parents have visitation rights even though the child's grandparents have custody.
