which a language community through political, community, and educational means attempts to increase the number of active speakers of the endangered language. This process is also sometimes referred to as language revival or reversing language shift. Endangered language - Wikipedia It is written by many scholars that half or more of the languages of the world are in danger of dying out by the end of the twenty-first century. Language endangerment is largely the result of government suppression through repressive education, laws, and policies. In the USA and around the world, minority communities have been working hard to reclaim their languages, encouraged and assisted, in many cases, by the
