FUNCTION Campbell Biology, Books a la Carte Edition - Pearson Plant Responses explain why plants need to respond to their environment in terms of the need to avoid predation and abiotic stress Like animals, plants must also need to respond to external stimuli. This is important to: Avoid predation.

Avoid abiotic (non-living) stress.

Maximise photosynthesis. Obtain more light, water and minerals.

39 Photomorphogenesis is the growth and development of plants in response to light. It allows plants to optimize their use of light and space. Photoperiodism is the ability to use light to track time. Plants can tell the time of day and time of year by sensing and using various wavelengths of sunlight.

Phototropism is a directional response that allows plants to grow towards, or even away from, light. Plant Sensory Systems and Responses – Biology 2e One important light response in plants is phototropism, which involves growth toward—or away from—a light source. Positive phototropism is growth towards a light source; negative phototropism is growth away from light. Shoots, or above-ground parts of plants, generally display positive phototropism—they bend toward the light. Phototropism & photoperiodism (article) | Khan Academy Concept 39.3 Responses to light are critical for plant success. • Light is an important environmental factor in the lives of plants. • Light is required for photosynthesis and cues key events in plant growth and development. Various MAMPs from beneficial microbes have been identified that, in analogy to MAMPs of pathogens, play crucial roles in the onset of the plant's immune response. There seems to be considerable redundancy in the ability of MAMPs from beneficials to induce resistance, which is also common to MAMPs of pathogens [55].
